Take a number: Students, parents play the waiting game to get into SAS

With student enrollment maxed out and waitlists at a record high, hopeful applicants to SAS face long waits of uncertain length.

The admissions process is in gridlock with over 500 on the waitlist but not a single spot open until current students leave or the satellite campus is built. With 3806 students currently enrolled, 106 students more than the 3700 required by the Economic Development Board (EDB), the administration has been moving towards building a new campus and submitted a proposal to the EDB for their consideration.

"There are a lot of rumors, but in reality nothing has been confirmed and everything is on hold," admissions head Laurie Thompson said. "Staff is more content to just focus on one campus and trying to make it the best it can be."

Thompson said that the waitlist is so long that there have been cases of pregnant mothers coming in to reserve spots for unborn babies, one parent even threatened to build his own school!

"[A] Gentlemen wanted to place his three high school girls, with good academic background, but we couldn't take them because we are totally full," Thompson said.

"So were walking around the campus and he says, 'What a beautiful campus. How much did it cost to build?" Thompson told him "approximately three hundred million." She said the man called his associate, and asked how much the hotel they are building in Singapore was costing. When the associate told him three hundred million the dad said "Stop the hotel. We're building a school for my daughters!"

Thompson said that she has been pressured by families saying they would do anything to get into school. She once received an email from a family saying that they would get the wife a teaching degree if that would help their chances of getting their child into school. Thompson said she's received offers for bribes on more than one occasion.

"It's amazing. Some people aren't coming here because of their jobs, people are coming here solely for the education experience."

"People have offered to buy me a personal gift or give me money. Of course I reject their offers," Thompson said.

Thompson said that U.S. companies were not the only ones inflating the weight list.

"It's amazing, some people aren't just coming here because of their jobs," she said. "People are coming here solely for the education experience."

Thompson said that a small percentage of parents have been coming to Singapore regardless of whether they are employed here solely because they want their kids to get into SAS.

With the school full no more applications being admitted, some might think that Thompson has it easy. They are mistaken, the recent rise in admission applications has made the job much harder. Now she has to say 'no' to every parent and go through the process of explaining why.

"It was easier when we were empty because you just say 'yes' and everyone's happy," Thompson said. "When you say 'no' you get the constant phone calls and the emails to double check waitlist status."

Thompson said she's at the office by seven thirty and usually work for 12 hours a day although it is not uncommon for her to be working till nine every night, even on Saturdays. She said that her office is "short staffed but all good humored and hard working".

"It's a love hate job. I love working with the families and placing students, but I hate having to say no to them"

The waitlist hierarchy

Priority One:
Obligated to place any students with a U.S. Passport (Varies if you work for military, parent is employed at school, etc).

Priority Two:
Anyone working for a U.S. company, but can be any nationality

Priority Three:
Student transferring from another International School.

Priority Four:
Student applying from a local school i.e. a public school in America or any other country.

*Are no longer a competing applications in these two categories.
